Whereabouts win for the UCI

Spain's Carlos Roman Gorbano loses privacy battle

The UCI has won a key legal battle in defence of the Whereabouts Information System it uses to carry out urine tests out of competition anti-doping tests.

In a press release issued on Monday, the UCI announced that a provincial court in Almeria, Spain, had rejected the appeal by Carlos Roman Gorbano, who had challenged the legitimacy of the Whereabouts Information System.

The decision confirmed a sentence issued in 2007 when a judge ruled that the implementation of the whereabouts programme does not breach individual rights guaranteed by the Spanish Constitution, in particular in respect of the protection of privacy.

UCI President Pat McQuaid claimed the ruling helped the fight against doping.

"Cycling has been at the forefront of the fight against doping for many years. We are once again proud that our commitment offers benefits to the sports movement as a whole," he said. "We are ever more convinced that our joint efforts against the scourge of doping will become increasingly effective, in particular as a result of rulings such as this, which recognise the basic principles upon which our strategies and actions are based."

The UCI thanked the Spanish Cycling Federation (RFEC) and the World Anti-Doping Agency (WADA) for playing an important part in the case.

Team sports must play by 'whereabouts' rule - WADA

LAUSANNE, Switzerland (AFP) - World anti-doping chiefs insisted on Tuesday that all team sports, without exception, must play by rules obliging some athletes to announce their whereabouts for out-of-competition testing.

"There has been no exception for any federation," said World Anti-Doping Agency (WADA) Director General Alan Howell.

World football's governing body FIFA had raised qualms about the revised world anti-doping code introduced for all sports early last year, claiming that footballers should be granted special treatment.

The rulebook requires that designated athletes in all sports should give notice of their whereabouts for one hour a day, 365 days a year, to ensure that doping control officials can carry out random out of competition testing.

Howell said a misunderstanding with FIFA over the 'whereabouts' requirement had been cleared up in a series of meetings through 2009.

No other team sports had directly asked WADA for exemptions, he added.

"And if we received one we would say no," Howell added.

WADA is about to review the record of all sports in the fight against doping, including football, with a conference with international federations due in Lausanne in April to discuss the issue.

Mišljenje sportista o W/A

... "to je cena koju plaća profesionalni sportista"

"It's the price you have to pay to be a professional athlete. If you want to have a clean sport you have got to sacrifice something. And I don't think that's a very big sacrifice compared to other jobs."

"For me it is really not a big problem because I have been working with such a system for many years, ever since I had my breakthrough internationally," said the 2004 and 2008 Olympic gold medalist. "We have been peddling the anti-doping code about where I was every day. I have kind of gotten used to it, so it is not a big deal. I have a very good trainer around me, and my coach sees the planning and since there's a coach day, he posts online and lets them know I'm available for example from 7-8am every day."

"It is the possibility of it which is so important. Of course they will not come to test you every day; most athletes will be tested around 5-20 times out of competition. But most athletes know where they are going to be because of their training planning. I know three months in advance where I'm going to be. For me it was never a big deal."

"Sport is not a job like being a journalist or a construction worker. It is not the same in that sense. I think doping is cheating people out of their livelihood. If I go into a competition and somebody uses doping to beat me, they get my prize money. I'd like everyone to be clean but as long as it is possible to cheat, someone will cheat."

Andreas Thorkildsen, athletics (javelin), Olympic champion, Norway
17 March 2009, Deutsche Presse Agentur (DPA)

"Bavljenje sportom nije isto što i bavljenje novinarstvom ili radom na građevini... Ako se takmičim i neko koristi doping da me pobedi, on dobija moju nagradu... Dokle god je moguće da neko vara, on će to i raditi."
